Abstract in English*	This book provides rules for a pluralistic society, using the model of the sciences, which themselves have refined the concept of freedom over the last two hundred years. There are no Jewish Physics or Christian Biology. Likewise, its practitioners are ideologically autonomous. Whether a cardiac surgeon is a Jew, a Christian or an atheist, does not matter for his medical expertise. This separation is threatened by what Jürgen Habermas the proliferation of scientific worldviews, on the other, a growing number of religious extremists. Both trends threaten our established legal system. At stake is our freedom of opinion and belief, our social diversity. However, this polarization threatens not only our freedom of religion, but pluralist society as a whole, for freedom of religion is the moderating principle of political discord.
